

In contemporary society, if religious formation does not come up to the general level of secular education, we are going to run into trouble defending our beliefs – even to ourselves. We are going to feel helpless when we come up against the secularism and relativism that are so pervasive in our culture and in the university. We are going to be tongue-tied when our faith comes under unjust attack.

Mary Ann Glendon
Learned Hand Professor of Law
Harvard University

CERC Canada

3284 Hernando Avenue
Powell River, B.C.
V8A 1B8

CERC USA

14400 Bel-Red Road #207
Bellevue, WA 98007

info@catholiceducation.org
604-485-0561

CERC: faith seeking understanding online resource library

www.catholiceducation.org

Your online resource library for the best in Catholic faith and culture

- featuring the latest articles from outstanding writers and journalists around the world
- offering the facts in context
- proclaiming the Church in the world
- serving the faith through education

www.catholiceducation.org

your online source for the best in Catholic faith and culture

The Catholic Education Resource Center

www.catholiceducation.org

Every week the Catholic Education Resource Center puts into my hands the very best articles on subjects of interest to all those concerned for the role of the Church in society. We need the support of these selections if we are to carry out our mission of being convincing witnesses to the hope within us. (1 Peter 3:15)

Most Reverend J. Michael Miller, CSB
Archbishop of Vancouver, B.C.
Former Secretary of the Vatican's
Congregation for Catholic Education

Over 200,000 people around the world access more than 300,000 articles a month on our site. Students, teachers, clergy, ordinary Catholics and enquiring non-Catholics find incredibly easy access to the information they need from our resource library.

Whether it's Peggy Noonan editorializing in the Wall Street Journal, Fr. Raymond de Souza in the National Post, or a sample chapter from George Weigel's latest book, you'll find the best writers, the most compelling ideas on matters of Catholic faith and culture at catholiceducation.org.

I have found CERC to be an invaluable resource at my finger tips. I recommend this website to all of my colleagues and students interested in promoting our Catholic faith.

Joe Wurtz, Dean of Students
Christendom College
Front Royal, Virginia

The Catholic Education Resource Center offers unparalleled coverage of the cultural and educational challenges and opportunities facing the contemporary Church. I count on your weekly emails, and I'm grateful for all that you do to help me diagnose the signs of the times.

W. Bradford Wilcox, Department of Sociology
University of Virginia

CERC is working to make freely available and easily accessible well written Catholic perspectives on everything from social justice issues to history and religion, from sexuality to literature and politics, from the environment to parenting and the latest trends in education.

Providing comment and perspective on Catholic issues has also been the goal of our popular email newsletter, the CERC Weekly Update. The update is a free service, listing all the new articles posted to the CERC site during the past week and pointing readers to important editorials of interest from around the world.

Visit catholiceducation.org, subscribe to our free CERC Weekly Update, and see for yourself.

The Catholic Education Resource Center is a gem. Its regular bulletins and the compilation of articles and news from across the Catholic world are invaluable for all those who are committed to Catholic Education and to strengthening the witness of the Church in the world.

George Cardinal Pell
Archbishop of Sydney
Sydney, Australia

